Reflection: God in the Valley by Tyler King (edited)

The Assyrians/Arameans had a view of God that restricted Him to certain locations. They claimed, “Yahweh is one of the mountains but not of the valleys” (1 Kings 20:28). It was this toxic mentality that caused many defeats for those who underestimated God and His omnipresence. As one reads in the Hebrew scriptures, it is easy to see that God gives great victories, even in the valleys. The valley of Elah was a victory of David over the giant, Goliath (1 Samuel 17). The valley of Berachah was a place of triumph for the Lord’s army (2 Chronicles 20:26). The valley of Achor was first tragic, then a reminder of God’s forward-thinking (Joshua 7; Hosea 2:15).

Valleys are about as common in the Bible as they are in our everyday lives. If there’s one lesson that both scripture and life teach us, it is that God is present. Period. God’s presence is what allowed Jeremiah to start looking toward the future (Jer. 33). It was God’s presence that pushed and motivated the people to continue with their work (Hag. 2). It was God’s presence that allowed Jacob to flee from temptation (Gen. 39). The presence of God is a reality that pushes people to act extraordinarily.

If you are like me, you were reading through the different valleys mentioned in the first paragraph and got to the valley of Berachah. Chances are you kind of made up a pronunciation in your head and moved on, but we want to spend a minute looking at this passage. As you read 2 Chronicles 20, you’ll come across this part of King Jehoshaphat’s prayer, “Lord, we do not know what to do, but our eyes are upon you” (v.12). Have you ever said a prayer like that? Though they were unsure of what actions to take, they trusted in God which led to victory! Overcome with joy, they praised God and the valley became known as “Berachah” which means “blessing.”

Though we are not always cognizant of it, God’s presence is a reality. If we attempt to go through a valley alone, darkness is inevitable. If we go through it with Him, Light is available (John 8:12). Satan tries to make valleys a trap, but God can turn them into a blessing.
